Description: This documentary tells the story of the Department of Energy's Hanford Nuclear Reservation which occupies 570 square miles of eastern Washington state -- the world's largest atomic facility. In 1986, after 40 years of operations hidden behind a veil of national security, it became publicly known that Hanford had released into the air over 500,000 curies of radioactive iodine-131 during its first decade of operation. More than 20,000 area school children were exposed, placing them at increased risk for thyroid disease and cancer. In 1988, DOE shut down Hanford, and today, Hanford faces a future dominated by the need to clean up the vast quantities of radioactive waste that have accumulated. The story of Hanford exposes the conflict between national security and public accountability. Guide

Description: Brazil is a nation of enormous wealth and staggering poverty; cities burgeon with the favelas of the displaced. All too often churches have sided with the interests of the powerful rather than the plight of the poor. The base church community movement seeks to change this situation. Its conviction is that, when unleashed, the Gospel can empower the dispossessed to challenge injustice and inequality. This video visits several base Christian communities, both urban and rural, and invites the viewer into the lives of people in these communities.

Description: Using humor, lively action and a delightful musical score, this animated story examines Christmas and contemporary values. Peter, a young boy, lives in a small town immersed in the festivities of the holiday season. When he encounters three visitors from outer space who have come to investigate the meaning of Christmas, Peter and his pet goose, Lucy, escort them around town. All they can find are discouraging examples of greed and commercialism that contradict Peter's definition of the holiday. When Lucy is kidnapped and Peter narrowly escapes drowning, the real meaning of Christmas emerges as the space visitors and townspeople unite to save them. Guide

Description: Suicide is a cry for help. Unfortunately, 5000 teenagers die every year because their cries go unheard by those closest to the sound--friends and family members. This film helps to train close friends to better recognize warning signs, like deep depression and inadvertent mood swings. It encourages teens to take their peer's destructive signals seriously by steering them toward professional help. In describing actual cases, the program reveals the dangerous, downward spiral resulting from deep depression, and gives guidance in handling a situation where a friend confesses suicidal feelings. Description: Highlights the plight of our oldest living link with the past, the majestic rainforests. It is difficult to conceive that in one lifetime we can destroy that which took nature millions of years to evolve -- that as each few seconds pass, 50 acres of the world's richest biological resource is stripped from the Earth. The rapid elimination of the rainforests is now seen as a major contribution to the 'greenhouse effect,' which is causing global climatic changes. Set in Australia, this video highlights a 70 square stand of rainforest. It is also the story of people who care, who will go to the most extraordinary lengths to save these rainforests.

Description: Gambling looks like 'easy money' to the players, corporations, and the government. This video looks at the pros and cons of the claim that the gambling industry will bring prosperity to communities. Tom Grey discusses the importance of the ballot box in stopping the spread of gambling. He works with a grassroots group in Pittsburg, California, and wins the fight against the expansion of gambling. Americans no longer worry much about the morality of gambling. They are choosing to gamble, and with the approval of their government, both of whom are lured by visions of 'easy money.'

Description: This fictional drama, set in a modern electronic church, portrays an extraordinary day in the life of Howard Woode, a television evangelist. The Rev. Woode is a charismatic figure who believes he has attained righteousness through his faith and his interpretation of scripture. He sometimes wonders though if his virtue is in fact vanity, and if his commitment is more to power and prominence than to God. But usually he feels he is absolutely right and that his enemies are absolutely wrong. Rev. Woode faces a spiritual crisis of an unexpected nature which forces him to reassess his faith, his ministry, and most painfully, himself.

Description: The remarkable story of the vibrant New Zealander Richard St. Barbe Baker, who dedicated most of his 92 years to preserving the world's forests - a cause he saw as essential to planetary survival. St. Barbe Baker is shown at work spreading his love of trees in New Zealand, North America, and with African tribes, whom he inspired to create a ceremonial dance for tree planting. Through his efforts, billions of trees were planted worldwide. Though he died recently, his tireless work and his environmental message are more timely than ever. His life serves as an inspiration for anyone concerned about the impact of deforestation on the ecosphere.

Dowd contends that our assumptions about the reality of our universe are the soil out of which our institutions grow. Western culture has looked upon God as a supreme landlord off the planet and outside the universe. Today, we are returning to an organic worldview that understands God to be in the universe and the universe in God - that the universe is God's body and we share in it with all living things -- all of creation. Description: In five segments, this video shows how images have shaped our culture from ancient art to present-day television, how symbol and myth infuse both sacramental images and secular mythologies, how television exhibits both potential and yet has a 'shadow' side for building community. The influence of the electronic church, in North America and throughout the world, is investigated. A primary resource for the Gospel, Culture and Media study, it is relevant to the Living Values theme in terms of the choices that need to be made around media's growing impact on our culture and on the Gospel's response to that impact. Description: Poses the question of how present modern production methods will affect future generations of farmers. Are we destroying the very soil that sustains us? The program looks at agriculture's golden age of prosperity at the turn of the century, and the subsequent calamity of the 1930's -- the 'Dust Bowl,' a result of man's intervention with the land. Examining current agricultural practices of man-made irrigation and pesticides, the video explores an organic farm, talks with experts at the Land Institute, and visits a large scale farm threatened by salt accumulation.

Worship

Description: While mainline Protestant denominations have been declining since the 1950's, America's hunger for spiritual meaning seems to be intensifying. Peter Jennings takes an in-depth look at Evangelical Protestant churches that employ various controversial forms of worship to increase attendance by making religion more "user-friendly," therapeutic and even fun. He interviews several prominent innovative pastors and visits churches, including Willow Creek Community Church outside Chicago. Despite all the "lost sheep" these new churches bring back through their ingenious worship forms, Jennings asks if they are in danger of selling out the Gospel.

Description: The Christian Protestant church is growing fast in China. Among the 8 million or more Christians, about 70% are women. They staff volunteer health clinics, lead Bible studies and youth groups, pastor churches, attend to the needs of children in orphanages, administer seminaries, and cook Sunday lunches for church members who travel hours to attend services. Women hold national, provincial and local leadership positions, and represent over 40% of the student body in China's 13 theological seminaries and training centers.

Advent/Christmas
Homeless Persons

Description: The wondrous gift of the Christ child is often given to us in ways we least expect. This is what happens in this winsome story for Christmas and all seasons. The second basement of the Church of the Good Shepherd holds a secret. No one knows that several street people live there - the Professor, Mrs. MacTuggle and young Isaiah. Then little Nanny, an abused and lonely child, finds her way to the basement with her cat, Gabriel. Through Nanny's action, the street people, the minister and members of the church are able to experience God's gift of love in a wonderful way. Played by the delightful Peppercorn puppets, this video will move the viewers to count their many blessings and thank God for His goodness. Issues of homelessness, poverty and love for all are addressed.
